Enchanting CHAMBER

A classically inspired designer joins forces with a duo of talented architects to overhaul an awkward and outdated bath into the elegant escape of a bygone era

THIS REMODELED BATH was part of a two-story addition to a Tudor-style home in Buckhead, where architects Julia Stainback and James Hess transformed a once dated, narrow bath into a private new master suite with scale and architectural detailing to match that of the existing home.

The homeowners, who are avid world travelers, embarked on the project armed with an abundance of influences and inspirations. The lady of the house, who keeps a notebook of her favorite things, required a relaxing soaking tub, a private water closet, handsome cabinetry and even a few modern conveniences. For the room's masterful finishing details, they called upon interior designer Liz Williams.

"We decided to use this 'silver dusk' marble on the floors, and laying it in a chevron pattern really gave it an edge," notes Williams. But its contemporary effect is tempered by rustic ceiling beams and ornately carved antique doors. The latter, sourced at Architectural Accents and stained to coordinate with the beachy grays of the room, provide an eye-catching pathway to the master bedroom.

Commanding full attention, a high-tech BainUltra tub presides within an imposing bay window, taking full advantage of the breathtaking view to the rear of the property.
